

PRINCIPLES OF GRADUATE MENTORING AT BYU

1. Graduate students should develop collegial relationships with faculty as they become immersed within their academic disciplines.
2. Graduate students should be involved in collaborative or mentoring relationships with graduate faculty to involve them in developing new knowledge or applications of knowledge within their disciplines.
3. Graduate students should be involved collaboratively with faculty members in the dissemination of new knowledge or applications through scholarly or creative forums.
4. Graduate faculty should engage graduate students in conversation and dialog about achieving academic and professional excellence in the context of strong spiritual understanding.
5. Graduate faculty should support and guide graduate students to improve their ability to teach and mentor undergraduate students effectively.
6. Graduate students will learn to build collaborative learning and work environments that may involve graduate students, faculty, undergraduates, and others.